Bank Tellers make direct contact with customers. Image source: Huffingtonpost.com Bank Teller Job Description Example A bank teller is a bank employee who deals directly with most customers. In some countries, this employee is also known as a cashier. Often times, teller jobs require cash handling experience with at least a high school diploma as qualification to be hired. Most banks will provide on the job training for their tellers. Tellers are considered a "front line" or "front office" staff in the banking industry. This is because they are the first contact a customer sees in the bank and are also the people most likely to detect and abort fraudulent transactions in order to prevent losses to the bank where they work. Bank teller job requires the tellers to be friendly and interactive with the customers, and also provide them with information about customers' accounts and bank services. They are are mostly the first – and at times only – employees that customers have contact with in a bank. They represent their bank in a good manner by smiling and being friendly with customers. As a teller, you may need to strain some facial muscles on bad days in order to give a winning smile. Tellers must also be able to take note of details when processing a transaction, and must have the mathematical and customer service skills to perform the job effectively. They wait on customers while depositing checks and cash into their accounts. They are also responsible for providing current and savings account balance details to customers and cash checks for them. The teller's role in a bank also includes ordering checks for those who need them. In the same vein, bank tellers check the authenticity of checks being deposited to protect the customers and the bank. They may also require that people should provide identification cards, or the last four digits of their Social Security number (in the United States and Canada) to identify themselves before withdrawing from their account. Job Summary: As a bank teller, you will be responsible for counting the cash in your register first thing in the morning and you must later balance your account after recording all daily transactions. This reconciliation routine includes comparing cash and checks with the transactions of the day.
